DeWolf Hopper will be seen at the Hyperion to-night in the funniest of comedies, "Dr. Syntax." The young by the West Side minstrels, assisted and pretty school girls of the chorus by the West Side Banjo club, at Warare all dressed in the quaint gowns ner hall to-morrow evening: entury ago, and no more than a trim ankle, a well moulded arm or a shapely Little Willie-Nositall. the Boy shoulder will be on exhibition. The scenery is superbly effective, yet simple and modernly realistic. There is a for-est glade where real leaves fall, and lier-I. W. We are shown also the inside and outside of a young ladies seminary, presided over by Miss Zenobla

"Trilby" will be presented at the Hyperion on Tuesday and Wednesday eve that can be obtained. A trial is mings. There will a special matinee on Wednesday to accommodate out of town parties and those who cannot attend the evening performances. The sale of eats is now open for the special "Trilby" matinee and also for the evening performances. The character of "Trilis one of the most unique of this century. She is a strange, fascinating creature. And as Du Maurier himself would have it, in classifying the well-bred London youth with the heroine, she has here and there some sweet old darling especially enslaved by her kindness, grace, knowledge of life, and tenler womanly sympathy, like the down ger Lady Chiselhurst, or some sweet young one, like the lovely Duchess of Towers, by her beauty, wit, good humor and sisterly interest in all he did, and who in some vague, distant manner constantly reminded him of "Trilby." although she was such a great and seems to get mixed by with the plots and private history of everybody else, and in which there is a proper amount of love-making well scattered through-out it all; and "Rasbery Shrub Sec," an original play by Frank C. As for "The Mother-in-Law" itself, it is sprightly and amusing to an unsuspected degree Sale of seats now open.

Grand Opera House. "Hands Across the Sea" is the attraction at the Grand opera house to-night and to-morrow night, There will be matinees to-day and to-morrow. "Hands Across the Sea" is an English melodrama of the popular sort, full of sensation, but also full of stir and ac-tion. It is written in Pettitt's best style -the emotions, the virtues and the kna veries being keyed to a somewhat high er pitch, the villain being by several de grees the most impudent, determined scoundrel ever seen in a play of this kind. All the scenic details and mountings are unusually well presented, so that there is a good deal to interest the popular eye as the action progresses. The company is an excellent one. Mr. Louis Bresen is an ideal scoundrel, be ing thoroughly detestable as "Robert Stillwood," even to the half-sneer with which he emphasizes every particular bit of rascality.

Plant's career reads like a leaf from romance. Forty years ago he was with the late Washington Webb of this city father of our townsman, Charles H Webb, engaged in conducting Adams' express business in New Haen. This dated his connection with the express business, in which in later years he became prominent in the south and his business abilities and rare executive talent have brought him teady and rapid prosperity until he is now one of the notable multi-million aires of the United States. He is now though well on in the seventies and with health never robust for years, a busy man, personally conducting the charge of his vast business interests and retains strongly his affection for his old Connecticut home in Bramford, where his boyhood and young man-hood were spent and where the Plant house, with its many acres of ared for land is one of the sights pointed out to all who pass that way.
